

Maturity is choosing silence, letting restless moments pass, protecting all your energy like gold you cannot waste on glass.
It's learning what deserves your voice and what is better left unheard, and knowing peace is often found in every quiet, gentle word.

Maturity is staying steady when the world begins to shake,
holding back the lightning strikes your temper wants to make.
It's breathing through the chaos when your heart is feeling torn, and rising with a calmness you never had before you were reborn.

Maturity is letting go of battles that were never yours to fight, releasing empty arguments that echo through the night.

It's softening your spirit after every wound
and scar,
and loving who you're growing into, your strength, your truth, your star.

It's wisdom wrapped in stillness;
it's peace you choose each day.
It's growth in every season, as you find your truest way.