

Let's test the weight of a word.

A single lie

earns the shadow of liar.

A hand that steals

finds itself called thief.

A crooked deal,

a cheater.

Funny how language

rushes to carve monuments

out of moments.

If it stalks the treeline,

if its lungs sing to the moon,

if every footprint says wolf,

who argues with the forest?

So answer me this.

If my hands fumble,
if my choices fracture,
if I trip over the same stone,
what name waits for me?

Does a mistake
have children?
Does repetition
inherit a surname?

Don't change the rules now.
You nodded when the first examples
passed.
You built the equation.
I'm only solving it.

Your silence
signed the paper.

Your agreement
loaded the chamber.
Intermission.

They tell me
life lives inside the tongue.
Speak light.
Harvest light.
Speak victory.
Walk toward victory.
I believe that.

But what courtroom
tries the words
never spoken?
What verdict
belongs to the sentence
echoing inside a skull?

If blessings can raise cathedrals,
can fear dig catacombs?
If hope lays brick,
does shame pour concrete?

I've watched invisible thoughts
forge visible cages.
No bars.
No locks.
Just beliefs
wearing the mask of facts.

Maybe that's the cruelest prison.
One where the guard
knows your name.
Still...
Identity is greedy.

It takes verbs
and melts them into nouns.
Do something long enough,
and grammar becomes destiny.
Not because the dictionary said so,
because people did.

Yet there's a crack
in the foundation.
One lie
doesn't condemn a soul.
One fight
doesn't crown a warrior.
One wrong turn
doesn't redraw the map.

Patterns have gravity.
Habits cast shadows.
Echoes become reputations.

But echoes
are not eternity.

Here's where the knot tightens.
Miss enough shots,
and they'll whisper failure.
Win one battle,
and suddenly you're a winner.

How convenient.
Mercy for one label.
Celebration for the other.
Same language.
Different courtroom.
Different sentence.

So maybe
the contradiction
was never in me.

Maybe it was hidden
inside the mouths
that taught us
a person can outgrow
one name,
yet somehow
deserve another forever.

Tell me again
how branding
and forgiveness
aren't written
with the same alphabet.
